Going back to Cali

The beats. The street art. The pop-and-lock. There's no denying the West Coast's influence on rap, says Oakland Museum of California curator René de Guzman. In Respect: Hip-Hop Style & Wisdom, the museum makes its case with interactive installations in MCing and graffiti; photos of 1990s Oakland fashion; and artifacts like a handwritten essay from Marin City's Tupac Shakur. But it's a medieval-style tapestry by L.A.-native Kehinde Wiley, who's set to paint Barack Obama's presidential portrait, that makes it clear: Hip-hop is a timeless art form. SPRING FLING

GAME ON

Baseball fans who flock to Arizona's Valley of the Sun this month tend to focus more on spring training schedules than hotel interiors. Even so, The Scott Resort & Spa—currently undergoing renovation, in Scottsdale's Old Town—is guaranteed to get their attention. Design firm AvroKO (the creative minds behind such eye-candy hospitality projects as SingleThread Farm in Healdsburg, California, and San Francisco's China Live food hall) created a breezy, decadent space that feels like a tropical step back in time. Curved brass fixtures and polished ceramic tile provide glamorous counterpoints to the lushness of palm-fringed courtyards, rattan furnishings, and Cuban American–influenced cuisine. The 204-room resort is a refuge from Southwest heat, whether you're sipping on a Sunset Limited at the bar or kicking back by the pool in a linen-draped cabana. Who needs a luxury skybox when home base is this swanky? From $329; thescottresort.com. —Luke Sykora
